Dear Terrance

Enclosed is an outline developing some of the ideas suggested during our meeting with Barry.

I look forward to your comments.

Best wishes

Brian

Four Part Doctor Who Serial

Setting. An alien planet on the remote fringes of the Galaxy. Inhabited by a race of fierce warrior-like humanoids, ruled by a king and a Priest caste. Their civilisation is at approximately the mediaeval stage of development - codes of honour, trial by combat etc. They worship some kind of sacred Beast, a giant ghostly version of which appears at times of crisis. The story will take place entirely in the Citadel, a mountaintop castle/temple. This is a taboo area to which only nobility are admitted, on pain of death. (There will be no location filming).

Background. The King, a newly acceded modern and enlightened figure wants his planet to join the Galactic Federation, a kind of U.N. of all intelligent races. The High Priest secretly fears that this will mean decadence and decay for his people.

A group of delegates from the Galactic Federation are to attend the formal coronation of the King. They will make use of the occasion to decide upon the King's application for Federation membership.

The Delegates

One Ice Warrior - Mars has ostensibly given up its aggressive colonisation policy, solved its climate problems and joined the federation. Two other non-humans from other member planets. The Earth Delegate - not yet arrived when the story opens.

Story development. A teaser in which someone - delegate or temple guard is killed - or maybe only terrified by an apparition of the sacred Beast, which then vanishes.

The Tardis materialises in the middle of the subsequent confusion. Jo and the Doctor emerge and are hunted, hide and are eventually caught. Their skins are saved by the fact that the Doctor is taken for the Earth Delegate, a masquerade which he is forced to continue. (Perhaps he justifies Jo as an Earth Princess, and has to treat her with reverence in public).

Once established in this role the Doctor finds that someone is making determined attempts to kill him. Attempts are also made to kill other delegates, and generally to stir up trouble between the delegates (internally) and between the natives of the planet. There are various apparitions of the sacred Beast, scaring the wits out of everyone, and killing the odd extra (but not too many deaths.)

Suggested Explanation. The High Priest is in alliance with one of the non-human delegates who for various reasons wants to keep the planet out of the Federation, or even cause the Federation to break up. The sacred Beast is a real monster beneath the Citadel, but is sauped-up (like the Hound of the Baskervilles) and set loose by the Priest.

Might be nice if the guilty delegate is not the Ice Warrior, (who the Doctor will naturally suspect) but one of the others - the most benevolent seeming one. (The Ice Warrior could be a sympathy character, and chum up with Jo.)

We would like the following to happen somewhere in the story: A really super 'trial by Combat' fight between the Doctor and the King's bodyguard, to which we would devote a days filming at Ealing, and do the full Douglas Fairbanks. The Doctor wins and spares his opponent.

Final confrontation between the Doctor and the sacred Beast, with the Doctor proving the creature is mortal and maybe taming it. Perhaps an attempted coup d'etat by the High Priest and a small scale battle.

DOCTOR WHO AND THE SHAPE OF TERROR

by BRIAN HAYLES

Like deserted oil rig - L.H.

The planet Medusa Centaurus, apart from its lichen-covered plains, is barren of advanced organisms of any kind. It has, however, rich mineral deposits. In order to examine and exploit these, a compact but highly automated research station - Pi Delta 6 - has been established, consisting of 6 highly skilled scientists and technicians, and every facility for a prolonged tour of duty. But, like the Marie Celeste, this is a deserted base. The automated equipment is working as usual - but where there should be men, there are none. A meal is left, half-eaten. A bunk is empty, unmade but apparently recently slept in. The technician's chair at the computer console has on its seat, a personal hand communicator, but no operator. On the switchboard of the interstellar radio, a light flashes. Over the loudspeaker comes a distant voice, acknowledging the station's S.O.S. and trying to make contact. But there is no-one there to answer....

The Rescue and Maintenance Probe captained by Commander Hallett orbits, in preparation for landing. The crew consists of Hallett, Engineer Tyler, Dr. Marion Adams, and a small security force led by Garford, a ruthless but efficient soldier. He is obsessed with the thought that PiDelta 6 has been taken over by space pirates, and insists that ~~the~~ the base be entered and searched on that basis. Hallett agrees and prepares to land.

(Something should go wrong with ships so they are trapped)

Meanwhile, in the micro-library and video-room of the base, sits a figure. This is Keppler, the computer technician. He is studying the screen of the microfilm viewer, so intently as to be strange.

Suddenly, in one corner of the room, the TARDIS materialises. Keppler pays no attention.

Materialise

somehow the - Coeppladthen find Keppler?

~~Inside~~ When the Doctor and Jo step outside, they try to make contact with Keppler, but in vain. He will not speak, and it is not for several moments that he even notices them. When he does, it is with great interest, but as though they were a new toy.

The Doctor and Jo go in search of other inhabitants, but they are seen by Garford's men and hunted like criminals - with laser shots first and questions after. Keppler is found, and declared by Dr. Adams to be in a severe state of shock. He is taken back to the sickbay. The Doctor and Jo are eventually captured and questioned. Garford favours the brutal approach, but Hallett is more diplomatic. Even so, the Doctor gives no satisfactory answers as to why or how he and Jo are in the base, and they are locked in the room adjoining the sickbay. While Hallett, Dr. Adams and Garford argue over the situation, we watch the guard in the corridor outside the sickbay. From under the sickbay door comes a thin trickle of what looks like foam - it moves to the back of the guard's boot, and then flows up his back. As it reaches the nerve centres at the back of his neck, he stiffens - agonised, but silent. We see his horrified face. Very quickly, he is covered with a skin of the foam, and for a moment, looks like a bizarre statue... then the foam subsides into the floor like a melting snowman, and flows back under the sickbay door. Mean while, the Doctor is picking the lock of his prison, and preparing to deal with the guard prior to getting to the TARDIS and escaping. But when he and Jo get outside, there is no guard. Garford, coming to interrogate the Doctor, assumes that it is he who has disposed of the guard. We cut into ~~XXXXXXXX~~ the sickbay as Garford opens it, thinking that the guard has been dumped there. We see the foam slither out ~~of~~ through the fine crack of the closed window. When Garford enters, with the Doctor and Hallett, he finds the guard isn't there... and Keppler, too, has vanished.

Difficult to realize - but possible. Reverse Film

The villain of the story is in fact a highly refined primordial cell of neural protoplasm - the Energid. The normal method of cell growth is by selective absorption. In this case, the Energid has mutated to absorb the protein and neural patterning of intelligent men. In the same way that, by interlinking a series of computers greater development potential is produced, the Energid is going through a super-anabolistic phase, adding to its power by fusing into its nucleus the brains and personalities of its victims. Eventually, it will reproduce by self-division - but aware that the Doctor's brain is a prize worth having, it retards reproduction until it can absorb his neural patterns and intellect.

As a non-cellular organism, the Energid is capable of considerable changes of shape and viscosity, but never loses its own distinctive surface texture. Thus it can echo the shape of a man, but can never become more than that. This surface could be rather like a stiffened detergent foam or egg-white, which could as easily subside into complete flatness, with all the motive qualities of "thin" water. It has however, limitations, and this is where Keppler comes in.

In its early stages, having exhausted the neural potential of its victims from the original research party, and yet finding itself hungry for knowledge, the Energid kept back the "shell" of one man - Keppler - and his physical form, as a means of learning. Using him as its eyes, the Energid was in the process of absorbing the ~~micro~~ knowledge contained in the micro-library, when the rescue party - and the Doctor - arrived. Keppler constantly reappears, and it is not for some time that he is identified as the tool of the Energid. He is proved inhuman by the fantastic regenerative healing of a laser wound. He also walks more and more strangely, leaving a barely discernable trail of slime - which the Doctor eventually identifies as protoplasm. Keppler is finally absorbed like all the other victims - but not before he succeeds in linking the Energid with another desirable knowledge source... the base computer. The Energid's intellect is now vastly superior to all but the Doctor's - but it contains a frightening complication.

As the Energid becomes increasingly aware of its own power, so it attacks and absorbs more members of the rescue team, including Garford, and leaving only Hallett, Tyler, and Dr. Adams. Imbalanced by the ruthless attitudes and martial nature of the ~~security~~^{security} guards the Energid's personality now leans more and more towards a malignant aggression. Soon it is becoming openly arrogant - and the Doctor can see only one way out. He must allow himself to be part of the Energid's monstrous neural structure.

When he announces this, Jo and the others fear that he has become power mad in seeking this strange alliance, and lock him away.

But the Energid invades the Doctor's prison, and proceeds to "seduce" his mind with dark visions. In a psychic nightmare, he is shown what heights he could attain given the Energid's power and his own intellect. From their fusion would come a new, super-race.... he would be a supreme creator.... a God. The Energid seems to be on the verge of winning the Doctor over, when he reveals his true motive in entering its neural field. Up til now, the Energid has been in a state of anabolism - growth. By calling on the age-old survival mechanisms that were once inherent in the absorbed men, he throws the Energid into a state of katabolism - self-destruction. With the remains of the rescue party, Jo watches the Energid's spectacular collapse, fearing the Doctor has perished in the cataclysm. But the Doctor is at her shoulder, and they quietly slip away to the TARDIS - and into their next adventure....

Don't like nightmare
sequences much.

Climax a bit metaphysical

The Scylla to the Bristol

Boy's Charybdis. A viable idea, but a bit conventional, and a bit thin. Might be worth further development and discussion.

Borion is an experienced writer who knows the show.

Friday

I like this more on re-reading, and think it might work for us.

Advantages:

A 'Ten Little' situation - a small party of people visit the base where the crew have mysteriously... vanished, and find themselves becoming rapidly fewer.

One amongst them has been taken over by the enemy.

- Tension amongst the trapped people.

A multi-formed monster that can come and go mysteriously -

One big set.

This could be planned to be a very cheap show - small cast, one set, one monster (if we can find a cheap and effective way of making it) and no exterior film - which could be very useful financially!

DOCTOR WHO AND THE BRAIN-DEAD

outline for a four-part story

by BRIAN HAYLES

DOCTOR WHO AND THE BRAIN-DEAD

an adventure in four parts

by BRIAN HAYLES

Orbiting Earth is a communications satellite, one of a linked series serving the whole planet. As it gently spins through space, it is struck by a strange beam from deep space. Its emitting tone changes, abruptly, to a thin-pitched, vibrating note....

On Earth, we are in the receiving area of the ground link station (rather like Goonhilly). The duty engineer, wearing earphones, is very concerned as various dials pitch and jump, wildly. Suddenly, the "Z" beam tone is heard. He clutches his head and falls to the ground, agonised. As we watch his head, it begins to change... and ice crystals begin to form on his face and hair....

When the European com-sat is found to be out of action, both Dr. Who and the Brigadier are called in - the one to solve the scientific problems involved which are baffling everyone else, and the other to investigate the suspected sabotage. The group suspected are the Isolationists, known to be actively attempting to undermine European scientific cooperation on the grounds of conservation. But behind the genuine protesters are professional agitators. The Brigadier is concerned with curtailing their violent activities, which cause a convenient red herring for the actual ~~cause~~ ^{reason for} the com-sat breakdown - the return of the Ice Warriors.

The Ice Warriors plan is basically simple. Their new weapon is the "Z" beam, which can in effect reduce most substances to subzero temperatures, and when used full force, can effect absolute zero - fatal to human beings, with their high proportion of H_2O . However, the beam is capable of pinpoint accuracy, and when aimed at the brain, freezes it, producing a zombie - easily and instantly imprinted to serve the Ice Warrior cause.

The "Z" beam is used first of all via the comsat, to take over the receiving station, with its vital "dish". The imprinted engineers will then, under instruction, construct a giant version of the "Z" beam transmitter. This involves taking over a neighbouring frozen food factory, an ideal cover under which to operate until the next major step in the ~~xxx~~ plan. The freeze centre transmitter is then connected to the radio dish, now rigged to transmit. The "Z" beam is then bounced off the immediate comsat to each of the comsat chain, and from them to all normal receiving stations throughout Earth. In an instant, the majority of Earth's industrial, political and military organisations will be under Ice Warrior control. With major resistance wiped out, the ensuing invasion will be easy. After that, with more "Z" beams operating, the planet can be reconditioned to the Martian climate needed by the invaders.

The Isolationists, although not responsible for the chaos that results from the comsat link being broken, are quick to claim it as a victory for their cause.

In trying to augment this victory, and stage a protest sit-in at the comsat station, they become involved not only with the Brigadier's men, but also with the "Brain-Dead" - the name for those taken over by the Ice Warriors.- The Ice Warriors are in fact represented on Earth by a senior Commander - Kulvis - who effectively manipulates the Isolationists to his own ends, and their eventual destruction.

The Doctor and the Brigadier, at first at loggerheads as to the real cause of the situation, eventually fight together. At first their battle is a losing one against the sophistication of the Ice Warrior's new weapon. But once the Doctor knows its function he discovers how to use it effectively against the aliens. Freezing metals to absolute zero renders them super-conductive, with a nil resistance to voltage. Just as the critical build-up is reached for the "Z" beam to operate globally, Dr. Who effects an electrical power connection with ~~with~~ the transmitter resulting in the spectacular destruction of the Ice Warriors and their slaves... the Brain-Dead.

The sets will all be made new and are to represent a Citadel complex on an imaginary planet. In general, they will not be the usual 10' flat type of set, but will be built to form curved shapes, many at 12' high. Some of these however will be on wheels and will be moved to new positions in the studio as required.

The main composite set will include a scaffolding rig approx. 24' x 7' + 9'. This again may be on wheels as it will be required for both episodes. If it is, note should be taken that a camera operates on this scaffolding.

The plan for both weeks will be virtually the same.

My apologies for the fact that I am ^{va}not able to give Dr. Who MMM the concentration it deserves. Since Jack fell ill the demands on my time have made it difficult for me to exercise anything but broad control over the shows I am responsible for. I have ^{he will}therefore arranged for Ian Scoones to be made up to Acting Designer and be (with a second Assistant) dealing with your future requirements. ¹

In accordance with Visual Effects policy, when such arrangements pertain, it is requested that the credits be assigned to Bernard Wilkie and Ian Scoones jointly.

BRIEF OUTLINE OF PLOT:

(Information in brackets NOT FOR PUBLICATION)

High on a mountain top on a planet on the remote fringes of the galaxy stands the Citadel of King Peladon, progressive young ruler of the primitive world whose name he bears.

Here is to be held the conference that will determine whether the planet Peladon shall be admitted to the Galactic Federation, a union of all the intelligent life-forms in the Galaxy. Most of the delegates are already assembled. There is Arcturus, Alpha Centauri and Izlyr an Ice Warrior. Only the delegate from Earth has still to arrive.

While the delegates wait, controversy rages between King Peladon and his Councillor Torbis - and Hepesh the High Priest, who is opposed to joining the Federation. Soon afterwards Torbis is killed, seemingly by Aggedor; a semi-mythical monster, guardian of the planet's traditions.

Dr. Who and Jo Grant are thrown into this situation when the Tardis makes an erratic landing near the Citadel, and the Doctor is taken for the missing delegate from Earth, with Jo as an attendant Princess.

(It soon becomes apparent that someone is attempting to sabotage the Conference. Attempts are made to kill the Doctor and other delegates and the Doctor, framed with a false charge of sacrilege, has to engage in hand-to-hand combat with the King's Champion.

Eventually the Doctor discovers that Hepesh the High Priest is being manipulated by one of the delegates, who has his own reasons for wrecking the Conference. The Doctor exposes the plot and plans for Peladon's admission can go ahead. Jo and the Doctor slip away to the Tardis, just as the real Earth delegate arrives. They leave not without some reluctance on Jo's part. The young and handsome King Peladon has asked her to become his Queen.....)

Subject: VISUAL EFFECTS CREDITS

To: Bernard Wilkie.

I must apologise on behalf of the production team of 'Dr.Who' MMM that your request concerning the Visual Effects credits was overlooked and that on Eps.1 and 2, in consequence, Ian Scoones had a sole credit. On Eps.3 and 4, this has been put right, and the credits will be assigned to Bernard Wilkie and Ian Scoones jointly, as you originally requested in your memo of 17th December.

(Signed by Sarah Newman (Secretary) in Barry Letts absence)

Episode One

The Doctor, taking Jo to a far planet in the distant future, makes some strange new friends and meets once more some old enemies.

Episode Two

Doctor Who falls foul of the Ice Warriors - and comes face to face with the Royal Beast, Aggedor.

Episode Three

H.R.H. Princess Jo receives a Royal proposal - and the Doctor fights for his life.

Episode Four

Doctor Who tames the untameable - and King Peladon is to be crowned. Will Jo be crowned his Queen?

On 31st January 1972 the recording of 'Dr. Who' MMM 'The Curse of Peladon' started four minutes late and overran by fifteen minutes. The late start was due to VTR difficulties in line-up. During the recording a camera was out of action for eight minutes.

On 1st February 1972 the recording was three minutes late in starting. This again was due to the VTR line-up. There was no overrun.

H.Tel.Cameras,
Visual Effects Manager

For the "Doctor Who" production in TC3 on Monday and Tuesday of Week 5, fifty or so flambeaux were used burning firelighters. Because firelighters use paraffin as a fuel, it was to be expected that dense smoke and soot particles would be produced which caused considerable discomfort to everyone in the studio. In view of this, the use of firelighters in flambeaux is unacceptable. Apart from the discomfort caused to staff, oily soot particles which are difficult to remove will have been drawn into the cameras and also deposited on the luminaires.

Visual Effects Manager, Mr. J.C. Kine, who has obvious responsibilities in such matters, has expressed concern regarding the use of firelighters.

It is important that the correct medium is used and to this end will all concerned please ensure that such matters are referred to the Visual Effects Manager as per standing instruction displayed in all studios.

The following is an extract from the Technical Manager's operational report for "Dr. Who" in TC3 on 31st January/1st February, 1972.

"Rehearsal started with all facilities.

Recording started 3 minutes late. Line-up of VT replay too extensive to complete in the allocated time and was in fact completed during breaks."

The producer, Mr. Barry Letts, telephoned expressing concern regarding the delay in the line-up of VT. As you know, "Dr. Who" is a very involved production where every minute of rehearsal and recording time is vital.

I believe that the delay was occasioned by roll back and mix requirements which are known to take longer to line-up and hence require a longer line-up time.

SUBJECT: ROLL BACK AND MIX ON DR. WHO

Copy: Mr. B. Letts

Mr. H. King

To: Vision Manager

I am replying to your memo of 7th February on behalf of V.T. Operations Manager.

The standard procedure when using Roll back and mix is that 15 minutes extra line-up time is booked on the machine involved, making a total of 45 minutes. Thus, the normal record line-up should be completed 15 minutes before the recording is due to start, leaving plenty of time to obtain synchronous replay conditions.

On the occasion in question the machine operator did not encounter any undue difficulties for a normal operation of this type and was not aware that the late start had been attributed to him. However, I understand that on this occasion it was a programme requirement to replay to an identical shot on camera to simulate the instant disappearance of one of the characters. When this was attempted it became apparent that there was a slight horizontal shift on the replayed V.T. picture, although the syncs and burst timed within the system tolerances. The reason for this is rather involved, but is a function of the replay signal processing on the videotape machine, the repetition rate of the PAL signal and the timing tolerances of the replay lines. Normally, on the VR 2000 machines in use, the operator is able to minimise any replay shift by altering the position of the video with respect to syncs. However, on this occasion the AVR-1 type machine was used, and this adjustment is not readily accessible. Hence the continued line-up necessary during recording time when the requirement became apparent. I should perhaps emphasise that we do not guarantee perfection in the above type of operation on any type of machine and that horizontal shifts of video of 110 n.sec can be expected. Ideally, mixes should be made only between different shots and, during editing, the transition from original material to the replayed VT material should be made on a shot change.

Thank you for bringing out attention to this problem. We shall investigate ways of bringing the AVR-1 into line with our other machines. Meanwhile, I would be grateful if our operators can be informed of any entries in your log that may be critical of our operation.

To summarise then, the late start was presumably due to a misunderstanding between our operator and the TM, and the delay during the actual recording time was due to the necessity to match the horizontal phasing accurately, thus exposing a shortcoming of the machine in question. Apologies for any inconvenience caused.
